At the Washington Center for Dentistry, patients are in for five-star treatment before they even step foot in the tranquil, warm-toned office. Just steps away from the White House, this well-established cosmetic dental practice boasts six dental professionals, including a periodontist, offering more than 100 years of experience between them.

POLISHING YOUR IMAGE

"We treat patients with a variety of cosmetic concerns, such as narrow smiles, small teeth and dissatisfaction with their previous dental work," says Dr. Peter Rinaldi. "We can use crowns, gum contouring and veneers to easily correct these problems."

Positioned as an exclusive office for discerning clientele, the Washington Center for Dentistry is a sought-after destination for honorable, ethical results. "Our model is to be a practice that is a center for excellence," says Dr. Daniel J. Deutsch, who was voted by his peers as one of Washington's top general dentists in Washingtonian magazine. Additional press for the practice includes mentions in Self magazine, among others. "Our watchwords are 'training and service.' Dentistry is constantly changing—with new technologies, treatments and techniques. We continue to attend training programs with leading dental education centers across the country," assert the six doctors, all who are on-call at any given time to remain accessible for after-hour emergencies. As a result, the doctors' extensive patient base, which reaches as far as Russia, Europe and South and Latin America, has come to expect nothing short of trustworthy, reliable care. "Our patients seek us out for our philosophy of optimal health and maintaining a healthy, natural look," they say.

In terms of patient luxuries, clients enjoy digital technology, as well as spring water, computer access, fruit juice, pillows, warm blankets, hot towels, and 16 state-of-the-art treatment suites featuring iPods that dial up music by artist, title or genre. "We also have our own on-site laboratory, which enables us to expedite and customize results," agree the doctors of the Washington Center for Dentistry. "Our support staff is just as big a drawing point for patients, as many of them have worked here for 20 years. Together, our goal is to attain beautiful, luminous teeth that really make the smile sparkle."
